A Swine Pasture.

The practice of good farmers differs in regard to the pasturing of swine according to their varying circumstances. In the East, where the country is most densely populated, and pasturage is scarce, the prevailing custom is to keep pigs in the pen for the greater part of the year. The best farmers consider the pig too valuable a laborer in manure making, to allow him to waste his energies in roaming the fields. Breeding swine, both males and sows, are allowed a little license in green pastures, but the rest of the herd, from the age of two months, until they are slaughtered, are kept in close pens and fattened as rapidly as possible. Under this system, pigs from ten months to a year old are made to weigh about three hundred pounds each, and to manufacture about ten dollars' worth of manure. This system is undoubtedly the best where all the pasture is needed for cows and sheep, and where large quantities of manure are needed for the hoed crops. In the West and South, where land is cheaper, good farmers rely mainly upon pasturage to keep their swine growing through the summer. In the newer settlements they run almost wild in the woods, and derive a large part of their living from meat. Manure is little prized, and the only value of the pig is his flesh, when slaughtered. Without committing ourselves at all to this method of making pork, it is conceded, that under certain circumstances it is desirable to have swine get their own living. What sort of a pasture shall be prepared for them? A correspondent wants to know if rye is the best article for them. Rye is only reliable for a few months, and if sown at all, should be sown in connection with clover and grass seed, to make a permanent pasture. M. W. Phillips, a large planter of Mississippi, has discarded rye, and now sows a mixture of clover, oats and barley. There is unquestionably a good foundation for the proverb: "living like pigs in clover," and whatever seeds are sown, clover should have a prominent place among them. It furnishes a larger amount of leaves, than any of the grasses, and is greedily eaten by swine. They are not very particular as to the kind of green food they have, and a farmer may consult his own convenience as to the kind of grain, or grass, he stocks his pasture with. Variety is better than any one kind. After the pasture is stocked, it would be better not to feed with swine the first year, unless their noses are jeweled to keep them from rooting. It should not be fed closely. A frequent change from one field to another is desirable, both for the thrift of the plants and of the animals. Pigs to be fattened, should be taken out of the pasture as early as the first of September, and kept in close pens. They can then be kept very economically upon corn cut by the roots, for two months, and finished off in November with old corn, or meal. Where a regular rotation is pursued, the last year of a field of grass may be devoted to the swine pasture. As the field is to be taken up in the fall for wheat, rye, or some other grain, it will be of little consequence if the turf be destroyed by the rooting of the swine. Good Whitewash for Indoors. At the request of many subscribers who have not read the previous volumes of the American Agriculturist, we here re-publish the directions given two years since for the best whitewash we have ever used. For a moderate sized house, say 8 rooms, about 33 lbs. Paris white, and 1 lb. best white glue are needed. Dissolve the glue in hot water; also make a thick wash with the Paris white and hot water, and add the dissolved glue and sufficient water to make the wash of the proper consistence. As the mass stiffens over night, it is better to mix each morning what is wanted during the day. If left over night, warm, or add hot water to make it limpid. The Paris white is chalk cleansed from its impurities, and is only a very pure whitening—better than is ordinarily used for making putty. We use the Cooper glue, which is considered the best here, but any good white glue will answer. It costs here 50 cents per lb. at retail. Both articles can be obtained in almost every city or village. ADMINISTERING MEDICINE TO HORSES.—I consider the usual method of giving medicine to horses by drenching, as it is called, highly objectionable. In this process, the horse's head is raised and held up, a bottle introduced into his mouth, his tongue pulled out and the liquid poured in his struggle, some of the medicine is quite likely to be drawn into his windpipe and lungs, and inflammation and fatal results sometimes follow. A better way is to mix the medicine with meal, or rye bran; make it into balls; pull out the horse's tongue, and place a ball as far back in his mouth as possible; then release his tongue, and he will almost certainly swallow the ball. Or the dose may be mixed with meal and honey, or other substance that will form a kind of jelly, placed upon a small wooden blade made of a shingle, and thrust into the back part of his mouth, when he will very easily swallow it.
